Why Organic

Here, at Tartine, we take great pride in selecting our wines, and this means choosing organic where ever possible.

This is so much more than just organic grapes. It's the whole process, from the vines to your glass. Wine in its purest form, with no unnatural intervention or additions, without the use of pesticides or herbicides.

Biodiversity is also encouraged by organic growers, cultivating plants that attract desirable insects and wild visitors. This ensures that predators, such as ladybirds, take care of the pests. Many farmers 'employ' their own hens or ducks as well, instead of using chemical pest controls. And some have gone as far as to reduce or eliminate pollution in the vineyards by using horses instead of tractors.

Many asthma sufferers now choose organic wines, as sulphites are known to increase symptoms. Whilst some sulphites occur naturally during fermentation, no further additions are made by organic growers. This also allows the true expression of the wine to shine through.
